ABOUT THE ARTWORK

I wanted to play with the colors of fruit, flowers, and pastries interacting with fine china, crystal, and glass. I wanted to add a bit of curious mischief with a cat eying some yellow finches. I liked the tension of a possible chase through the middle of a tentative tea party.

Living things were created spiritually before physically. All cultures have creation stories that describe the culmination of earth and man--when disharmony enters that relationship, the earth and its inhabitants grow sick and suffer. Never before has there been such an opportunity to divorce the spirit of man and nature, and this denial results in the withering of the collective living soul. When this disconnection occurs, the man-made's dehumanizing concrete jungle becomes self-destructive in its attempts to devour the divinely made's organic harmony. In opposition to the force that seeks this degradation, my work is a continuous effort to keep that first primitive connection. The natural world is a
